Contributed by admin on May 10, 2014 – 11:33 PM

Scientists in School, a leading Canadian science outreach charity, brought hands-on science to shoppers at the Northumberland Mall on Saturday, May 10 with its 8th annual Malls of Science. This year Scientists in School has joined with Science Rendezvous, a nationwide science festival.

The all-day event featured hands-on science activities for kids of all ages including:

- Building hover crafts, balsam wood gliders and gear trains.
- Performing forensic fingerprint, ink chromatography and soil analyses.
- Exploring food webs and adaptations with animal pelts and skulls.
- Making art using solar energy.

Scientists in School believes that every child deserves to be inspired by science. Scientists in School offers Malls of Science to bring science fun to kids and their families in their communities. Malls of Science is a part of Science Rendezvous — a nationwide festival of science that started in Toronto in 2008 and has grown to include nearly 3,000 volunteers doing science activities at more than 300 sites across Canada. Thanks to our partner— Cameco— Scientists in School is once again able to bring Malls of Science to families in Northumberland.
